LGBT Vets Remember Fallen Comrades

SAN FRANCISCO - LGBT veterans across the country take time to remember fallen comrades today, many of whom died in silence, as fearful of disclosing their sexuality to the military as they were of the enemy, reported 365Gay.com.

The exact number of Gays who died in the service of their country will never be known, but through diaries and other historical documents we know that Gays and Lesbians were serving in the military as far back as the American Revolution.

The Urban Institute estimates that today there are more than 1 million Lesbian and Gay veterans in the United States.

Some of those LGBT vets marched to the the U.S.S. Potomac which is moored at Oakland for a special Veterans Day memorial service and to call attention to "don't ask, don't tell" the policy that bars Gays from serving openly. LGBT members of all branches of the military, led by a color guard from the Alexander Hamilton Post, marched to the ship.

Following a moment of silence the vets heard from speakers that will include California Assemblymember Mark Leno and Sharra Greer, Director of Law and Policy, Servicemembers Legal Defense Network. The service concluded with the Bay Area American Indian Two-Spirits Drum Circle. The memorial takes place in conjunction with the National Gay and Lesbian Task Force's Annual Creating Change Conference and is sponsored by Equality California.

Across the country, in Georgia, a billboard will be unveiled paying tribute to LGBT veterans. The billboard is the second phase of the "We Are Your Neighbors" campaign by Georgia Equality. Jointly sponsored by the Georgia Chapter of the American Veterans for Equal Rights the billboard is located on Victory Drive, less than a half mile from the entrance of Fort Benning in Columbus, Georgia. The billboard includes a picture of Andrew Nichols formerly of Georgia, an honorably discharged member of the United States Army who achieved the rank of Sergeant. The caption on the billboard reads: "I fight for your freedom. And... I am Gay." Nichols is in uniform in the picture.

The National Black Justice Coalition

paid tribute to African American Gays who served their country.

"Just as racial segregation denied our armed forces the talent and qualifications of the African American community, the 'Don't Ask, Don't Tell' law also exacts a cost to our national security and military readiness," the organization said in a statement. "And just as the arguments against military desegregation proved to be unfounded, so are the arguments against allowing Lesbian and Gay patriots the opportunity to serve openly. Indeed, those who seek to deny the LGBT community the opportunity to serve use many of the same justifications once used to deny African Americans that same opportunity. Discrimination should never find a home among our nation's fighting forces."

Veterans Day comes as the number of co-sponsors of a bill to repeal 'Don't Ask, Don't Tell' reached 100. The bill, introduced in March by Representative Marty Meehan (D-MA), is co-sponsored by Republican and Democratic lawmakers, including nine members of the House Armed Services Committee. Representative Rahm Emanuel (D-IL) became the hundredth co-sponsor.

"There is historic, bipartisan progress being made in the fight to lift the ban," said C. Dixon Osburn, executive director of Servicemembers Legal Defense Network.

A recent poll shows that 79% of Americans support allowing Gays to serve openly. According to the Pentagon, it has discharged more than 10,000 service members for being Gay, including nearly 800 with skills deemed "mission critical" by the Department of Defense.

"My husband is a Vietnam combat veteran who probably served with Gays while defending our freedom," said Congresswoman Ileana Ros-Lehtinen (R-FL), a co-sponsor of the legislation. "In fact, one of the army nurses who cared for him after he was severely injured was a Lesbian. Did her sexual orientation make her or the guys who served with Dexter less qualified? Of course not. This is an unjust policy that hurts our preparedness." Her husband, Dexter Lehtinen is a former acting U.S. Attorney. He received a Purple Heart for his service in Vietnam.

Bush Administration At War With Unions Over LGBT Support

CINCINNATI - The Justice Department is involved in a court case that could affect the way labor unions support LGBT issues, reported 365Gay.com.

The case involves Glen Greenwood, a air-pollution worker for the Ohio EPA. An elder in the Presbyterian Church he objects to his union dues being used by his civil service union in campaigns supporting gay rights and abortion. Greenwood is not a member of the Ohio Civil Service Employees Association but it bargains for him. His dues are paid through a payroll withholding.

Greenwood asked the state to stop withholding approximately $34 each pay period that the union uses for social issues. His union was involved in fighting last year's constitutional amendment in Ohio to barsame-sex marriage. The measure passed anyway.

The OCSE also has sought domestic partner benefits for G/L couples in its contracts and has lobbied for laws that prohibit discrimination on the basis of sexual orientation. When the state refused to stop withholding the money earmarked for social issues Greenwood sought to end all payments to the union but the state continued to hold back the dues.

In court the Justice Department is fighting the state labor contract with its 36,000 public employees, accusing it of violating religious freedoms guaranteed under the 1964 Civil Rights Act. In 1988, the US Supreme Court ruled unions could not use money collected from nonunion workers for political activities if those workers opposed. The ruling did, however, say that unions could impose dues for representing those workers in contract negotiations.

The Justice Department wants all dues dropped if a worker objects to any money being used for issues with which they disagree. Shortly after the Justice Department filed suit the U.S. Equal Employment Opportunity Commission, filed a second case. The union says the administration is trying to silence unions from becoming involved in social issues.

EDITORIAL

It's A New Day In The Old Pueblo

In Tuesday's (Nov. 8) general election, Tucson voters cast their ballots for a positive working coalition to serve the entire community on the City Council, ending the era of questionable spending and favoring special interests that the Republican-led majority embraced in the past four years.

By wide margins of 22% and 31% respectively, voters selected Democrats Karin Uhlich and Nina Trasoff to serve the next four years on the Council from Ward's 3 and 6. Ward 5 Councilmember Steve Leal, a Democrat, was unopposed for a fifth term.

Tucsonans who voted spoke loud and clear, they had enough and it was time for a change for local government. Yes, the political answer "it's the economy stupid," was the correct response.

Some within the campaigns of the defeated incumbents made the hypocritical charges of negative campaigning by the winners, despite the "mud on their hands."

As plainly stated in the Observer editorial, it was the record of the incumbents, highlighting a microcosm of their decisions, wasting taxpayer money on such boondoggles as the proposed 2002, half-cent sales tax or the garbage fee for questionable city programs and departments, naming two of the many for the past four years, was the factor.

When it is time for consideration, an incumbent elected official run on their record, not hot air, and this time, the two incumbents were deflated on election night.

Voters by a narrow margin said no to giving the Mayor and Council a pay raise, which is understandable with the body that was on the Council during the time for voters to consider. Tucsonans gave a thumbs-up to allowing the Mayor and Council to spend the entire money raised by fees and taxes.

On Dec. 5, a new, positive, working coalition will take their seats on the Council and we think and hope they will budget the monies wisely. If not, in four years time they will have their record to run on. Voters won't forget. Good luck to Councilmember-elect Nina Trasoff, Karin Uhlich, returning Councilmember Steve Leal and the rest of the new coalition. It's a new day in the Old Pueblo.

UPDATE

Tucson Listed As A LGBT-Friendly Place To Live

TUCSON - A travel book that will be released this month will highlight Salt Lake City as a “Gay-friendly place to live,” reported (AP).

New York, Chicago, Minneapolis and Tucson also made the list compiled by Gregory Kompes, who is the author of “50 Fabulous Gay-friendly Places to Live.”

Kompes was so impressed by Salt Lake City’s Gay community that he fought to keep the city on the list, finally compromising with his publisher to include Salt Lake as a bonus 51st entry. His publisher simply couldn’t reconcile the idea of Salt Lake City’s Gay-friendly community because of the Mormon religion and Utah’s reputation as a Republican state.

Kompes based his criteria for the 51 cities on factors including nightlife, employment opportunities, local politics and Gay-owned business.

7th Annual International Transgender Day Of Remembrance, Nov. 20

TUCSON - The Southern Arizona Gender Alliance (SAGA), a program of Wingspan, invites you to join our observance of the Seventh Annual International Transgender Day of Remembrance on Sunday, Nov. 20, 4:30 pm at Catalina Park (4th Avenue and 2nd St). Everyone, Transpeople and our allies are encouraged to attend.

The Transgender Day of Remembrance is an annual event commemorating the lives of people who were murdered because of their gender identities or expressions. The event is held in November to honor Rita Hester, whose murder on Nov. 28, 1998 inspired a San Francisco candlelight vigil in early 1999. Since then, the event has grown to encompass ceremonies in cities across the world. In 2004, more than 110 cities worldwide participated. This will be Tucson’s fifth year of participation.

Nearly 30 Transgender people were killed since last year’s memorial. The local service will be particularly poignant this year, as one of the dead is Amancio “Delila” Corrales of Yuma, whose body was found in the Colorado River in early May.

The event will feature the music of Namoli Brennet and Desert Voices as well as a variety of speakers tentatively including Melita Quance, Program Coordinator of the Wingspan Anti-Violence Project; transgender youth advocate Joseph Nutini; Michael Baughman, Precinct 21 (Yuma County) Democratic Party Committeeperson; Alison Davison, Southern Arizona Gender Alliance, and others. After a candle service and reading the names of those lost in the last year, the gathering will proceed south on 4th Avenue to Wingspan, where a reception will be held after the ceremony.

From the opener “I’ve Got My Love To Keep Me Warm” with a combo featuring piano, bass, guitar, drum and trumpet, the audience will be tapping their toes and enjoying the swinging sounds of the chorus. Other selections will feature the work of Namoli Brennet, local rock star and Desert Voices accompanist, including a new look at ‘Auld Lang Syne’ and two other brand new songs written especially for the chorus.

Despite Loss, Anti-LGBT Vote, Tide May Be Changing

WASHINGTON, D.C. - An analysis of voter trends in Tuesday's (Nov. 8) off-year election shows that the country appears to be mellowing to Gay issues and candidates despite the approval by the electorate in Texas of an anti-Gay marriage amendment. 365Gay.com reported.

The biggest Gay win Tuesday was in Maine where voters rejected an attempt to overturn the state's LGBT civil rights law.

In Cleveland Heights, Ohio, a city council member who fought against the nation's first voter-approved domestic partner registry lost a bid for re-election to a candidate who is openly Gay. The Rev. Jimmie Hicks Jr. lost Tuesday's election to Mark Tumeo. Hicks had sued to block the creation the city's domestic partner registry, which recognizes Gay and unmarried heterosexual couples but gives no legal status or marriage rights. The registry had been approved by voters in 2003 and ruled constitutional by a Cuyahoga County judge. In July, the 8th Ohio District Court of Appeals upheld the ruling, but not before the city spent more than $100,000 to fight Hicks' lawsuit.

Statewide in Ohio, a state that went for George Bush last year, four other LGBT candidates endorsed by the national Gay & Lesbian Victory Fund were elected. Three of the wins were for new seats, including Joe Santiago for Cleveland City Council, Nickie Antonio for an At-Large Lakewood City Council seat and Joe Lacey for a new seat on the Dayton School Board. Mary Jo Hudson won a seat she was appointed to last year on the Columbus City Council.

The Victory Fund said that of its 55 endorsements of Gay and Lesbian candidates nationwide, 35 won their races or performed well enough to proceed to a runoff.

In Harrisburg, Pennsylvania, Dan Miller garnered 22% of the vote, enough to secure a new seat on the Harrisburg City Council. This marks the first time an openly Gay candidate was elected in that city.

In Texas, where a statewide vote Tuesday to ban legal recognition of same-sex relationships passed overwhelmingly, 33% of Houston voters supported Sue Lovell for an At-Large City Council seat, enough to propel Lovell to a December 6th runoff. Houston is the fourth largest city in the country.

"These candidates bring the skill, talent and passion that the LGBT community has to contribute to our political system and to society as a whole," said Chuck Wolfe, president and CEO of the Gay & Lesbian Victory Fund. "Winning races at the local level and striving for change within the political process is the surest way to achieve true equality for Gay and Lesbian Americans," Wolfe added.

Anti-Gay attacks against Norfolk, Virginia City Treasurer candidate Vivian Paige appear to have contributed to her loss. Last month, fraudulent flyers placed on cars outside an NAACP candidate forum proclaimed that Vivian Paige, a highly qualified candidate and Certified Public Accountant, is a proud Lesbian and "doesn't care what people think!" A group called Christian Leaders of Tomorrow went on TV with an ad last week targeting Paige's sexual orientation.

Federal Anti-G/L Marriage Amendment Moves Forward

WASHINGTON, D.C. - The federal marriage amendment was approved by a Senate sub-committee Wednesday (Nov. 9) and is likely to go to a vote of the full Judiciary Committee, reported 365Gay.com.

The sub-committee voted 5 - 4 along party lines to pass the amendment, called the "Marriage Protection Act." It defines marriage as the union between a man and a woman. Democrats on the sub-committee said the amendment is not needed. The Defense of Marriage Act, signed into law by President Bill Clinton already prevents the federal government from recognizing same-sex marriage.

Sen. Russell D. Feingold (D-WI), the Ranking Democrat on the sub-committee said the Senate should be concentrating on more pressing issues like ethics and gas prices. Senators Dianne Feinstein (D-CA) and Ted Kennedy (D-MA) argued that states should be allowed to make their own decisions on same-sex marriage. They said states are already taking up the issue, pointing to Texas which passed its own amendment banning Gay marriage on Tuesday and Massachusetts which already allows Gay marriage.

The amendment is sponsored in the Senate by Sam Brownback (R-KA). Brownback, expected to be a candidate for the GOP presidential nomination in 2008, is chair of the sub-committee.

The deciding vote Wednesday was cast by Sen. Arlen Specter (R-PA). Specter, the chair of the full Judiciary Committee, repeating remarks he made, saying that while he opposes the amendment he believes it should receive a vote on the Senate floor. His vote to send the measure to the committee he chairs ensures it will pass the Judiciary and head to the full Senate for a vote. Specter said that when the amendment comes to a final vote in the Senate he will oppose it.

Gay rights activists watched the sub-committee proceedings.

Caroline Fredrickson, Director of the ACLU Washington Legislative Office, told reporters after the vote that "the Constitution exists to protect rights, not undermine them."

Attempts by Republicans in Congress to pass the proposed amendment that defines marriage as a union between a man and a woman failed last year. The measure was reintroduced in January. A House version was reintroduced in March.

"Congress rightly rejected this measure last year and it must reject it again. Discrimination against hard-working Americans has no place in our nation's founding document,," Fredrickson said.

The Human Rights Campaign in a statement called the resurgence of the amendment "cynical politics."

"As the attention turns to the Senate Judiciary Committee, it's important for fair-minded Americans to make it clear that discrimination doesn't belong in the Constitution. Call your Senators, tell them that all Americans deserve the same rights, responsibilities and protections under law," HRC President Joe Solmonese said.

FDA Proposes Condom Labeling That Warns Of Risk

WASHINGTON, D.C. - The FDA wants condom packages to warn that condoms are less effective at stopping some sexually transmitted diseases, such as herpes and human papillomavirus, than others. The agency also wants packaging to advise that condoms that use a common spermicidal lubricant should not be used by people at risk of catching HIV, reported Advocate.com.

In proposed rules posted on its Web site, the Food and Drug Administration said the changes to male condom labels would provide people with more precise information on how well condoms work. They would apply to latex condoms, which make up about 98% of the market; rules for other condoms are forthcoming.

The FDA would not insist condom manufacturers use FDA-provided language, but they would have to include the information in some form on their packages. "More accurate information about the risks and benefits of condom use with respect to STD transmission can lead to better choices by individuals who seek to protect themselves against these infections and potentially to reduced transfer of STDs," the FDA said.

Condom packages now generally note they are effective in reducing the chance of pregnancy and getting an STD, particularly HIV, from intercourse. Under the proposed rules, condom packages would say that they are thought to be less effective against certain STDs, including herpes and human papillomavirus, because those diseases can be transmitted through skin-to-skin contact in places not covered by a condom. However, studies have shown condom use does reduce the chances of a person suffering from some of the worst effects of human papillomavirus, or HPV, which include genital warts and cervical cancer.

In addition, packages of condoms that use nonoxynol-9, which kills sperm, would come with a recommendation that they should not be used by people at risk of catching HIV, the virus that causes AIDS. The spermicide can irritate the vagina or rectum, leading to a greater chance that HIV can be transmitted from an infected partner. Packages of condoms with nonoxynol-9 already include a statement noting that the extent of the chemical's effectiveness in decreasing the risk of pregnancy beyond that of the condom itself is uncertain.

The FDA considered, and discarded, suggestions to include social or public health-related advice on condom packages, the agency said. Some activists had worried the FDA would propose far greater changes to current guidelines and exaggerate the failure rate of condoms in accordance with the wishes of some social conservatives. But that didn't happen. "I would hope that the clarifying language marks the start of a real commitment to educating the American public about the importance of condom use—and public-health programs to help people use them correctly and consistently," said Julie Davids, executive director, of the Community HIV/AIDS Mobilization Project. She commended FDA "for sticking to sound public health rather than scare tactics."

The FDA said the financial impact on manufacturers to change their labels would be minimal. A spokeswoman for the Trojan brand of condoms said the company was reviewing the guidelines but declined to discuss them further. The proposed rules are the result of a review mandated by Congress in 2000. Sen. Tom Coburn (R-OK) said the proposed language falls far short. "While I am encouraged that the FDA finally has recognized the inaccurate claims about contraceptives containing nonoxynol-9 and the exaggerated claims of condom protection against sexually transmitted diseases, the agency continues to promote inconclusive assurances that put women unknowingly at risk for cervical cancer, or worse," he said.

Coburn, a physician, dismissed the notion that condoms protect against cervical cancer as speculation, saying there wasn't enough science to prove it. "The FDA should stop playing political games with the health and lives of Americans and immediately comply with the law by ensuring only medically accurate information that is irrefutable on condom labels," he said.

CDC: U.S. Syphilis Rates Continue To Climb

WASHINGTON, D.C. - The U.S. Centers for Disease Control and Prevention (CDC) announced Tuesday (Nov. 8) that syphilis infections are rising, led by an increase among men who have sex with men (MSM), reported 365Gay.com.

The national rate of primary and secondary syphilis (the early stages of the disease) rose for the fourth consecutive year in 2004, since hitting an historic low in 2000. The CDC released the information during a press briefing of its 2004 national surveillance data for syphilis, gonorrhea and chlamydia.

"(Sexually transmitted diseases) pose a significant and ongoing threat," said Dr. Ronald O. Valdiserri, the acting director of the CDC's HIV, STD and TB prevention programs. "All three of the STDs ... increase the risk of HIV transmission."

"Syphilis has increased 8 percent during 2003-2004," said Dr. John M. Douglas, director of the CDC division for STD prevention. "The overall increase is attributable to men who have sex with men."

Syphilis rates increased in many U.S. cities with large Gay populations, including San Francisco, which had the highest rate of any city for the third straight year, as well as Chicago, Denver, Miami, New York City and Seattle, among others.

"This increase has occurred among all racial groups," Douglas continued. "But between blacks the rates increased for the first time in a decade, largely attributable to MSM."

The syphilis rate among African-American men rose 22.6 percent in 2004.

Douglas said part of the problem came from sexual meetings arranged through the Internet, which made it difficult to track the course of new syphilis infections.

"When it comes to reducing syphilis in MSM there is no simple solution," Valdiserri said, adding that "innovative screening and prevention programs around the country are having a positive impact in many areas and providing crucial lessons that will help us meet new challenges."

The CDC also reported that the national rate of gonorrhea reached an all-time low in 2004. However, research in 28 cities found an increase in gonorrhea cases that were resistant to fluoroquinolone antibiotics, the first-line treatment for the infection, and the increase was eight times higher for MSM than for heterosexuals.

Librarians On Front Lines To Protect LGBT Literature From Censorship

NEW YORK - During the 2004 Republican National Convention as thousands of protesters massed in New York City, a group of 40 volunteers came to their aid, researching questions about the convention and offering "ready reference kits" - city maps, schedules of demonstrations, lists of telephone numbers for lawyers, hospitals and lodgings, reported 365Gay.com.

The group called itself Radical Reference, and its members took to the streets to provide on-the-go information, including an explanation of a protester's rights in the event of arrest. The group's co-founder, Jenna Freedman, a librarian at Manhattan's Barnard College, and many of her colleagues in the library world are proving that the stereotype of the quiet librarian is just that.

Today's librarians are using websites, e-mail, text messages and more to create an international community of like-minded (and tech-savvy) library workers. They're challenging perceptions and redefining themselves as fierce defenders of free speech who make activism part of the job.

Jessamyn West, an Americorp volunteer at libraries in rural Vermont, may be the quintessential radical librarian working hard to protect free and open access to information. "Loosely, I believe people would be better off with less governmental interference," she proclaims on one of her websites, jessamyn.com. "I'm against hierarchies, and I believe that humans have a responsibility to look after each other and take care of one another so that everyone's strengths and creativity are utilized and maximized."

West maintains librarian.net, offering resources and information to librarians. She's also a member of the Social Responsibilities Round Table, which was formed within the American Library Association nearly three decades ago for those who believe libraries have a duty to be actively involved in the day's social issues, including feminism, poverty and racism.

This kind of watchdog activism goes along with the ALA's basic tenets, West said. Attempts at censorship are common. Librarians often encounter issues such as local legislators passing bills that bar libraries from using public funds to buy books on Gay, Lesbian, Bisexual and Lesbian issues, she said.

This summer, at the Guilderland town library in upstate New York, trustee John Daly proposed putting an orange sticker on all young adult novels containing sexual descriptions. Daly argued it wasn't the sexual content he objected to but that he believes libraries "have an obligation to help the parents." The proposal was ultimately rejected. "If you start labeling books for one type of content, there are lots of other things that people can find objectionable in books: racism, anti-Semitism, violence," library director Barbara Nichols Randall told the Albany Times Union.

Neither West nor the round table group was directly involved with the decision. Many radical librarians credit Sanford Berman with showing librarians that activism and librarianship go hand-in-hand. Berman, who retired in 1999 from the Hennepin County Public Library in Minnesota, has spent most of his life fighting to change subject headings in library catalogue systems that are, in his words, "archaic, foolish, clumsy, inauthentic and biased subject terms."

Because of Berman, such subject headings as ageism and homophobia have made their way into catalogue systems. His work also helped change the heading "color of man" to "human skin color." Even in retirement, he works to improve library resources for the poor and crusades for changes to the Library of Congress' cataloguing system.

Radical Reference has stayed active since the RNC, doing its part to help prevent censorship and spread information by teaching fact-checking to journalists, doing workshops on library resources and participating in other demonstrations. Its members are scattered around the U.S. and in a few other countries. The newest collective was just established in India.

Through the organization's website, questions are submitted to a group of nearly 70 Radical Referencers who research and post answers. Questions have included everything from how to identify the subject of an archival Ku Klux Klan photograph to recent immigration and deportation statistics. Questions can be asked and answered in at least nine languages besides English.

Freedman has also been working on establishing a collection of "zines," small circulation, noncommercial publications that focus on subjects usually found only on the edge of mainstream media, such as Lesbian issues. So far she has about 1,000 zines at Barnard, focusing primarily on women's issues. "The idea was that these were voices not represented in libraries," she said. "If you want an accurate picture of society, you have to hear from everyone."

The changing perceptions of librarians may be attracting more people to the profession. Enrolment in accredited Library and Information Science degree programs have climbed from 18,901 in 1997 to 26,521 in 2003, the library association said. "There's always been a group of progressive librarians, committed to free access, but it used to be harder for them to organize," said West. "The Internet has really helped to get the message out."

Gay Priests Struggle To Find A Place In Church

NEWYORK - The Rev. Fred Daley, a Gay, Roman Catholic priest, had grown increasingly disturbed by Vatican pronouncements over the years that homosexuals were unfit for the clergy, reported the (AP) on 365Gay.com.

Then the situation escalated - some church leaders suggested that Gays were responsible for the clergy sex abuse crisis. Daley was so angry, he did something last year that almost no other Gay Catholic cleric in the country has done: He came out to his bishop, parishioners and his entire community to show that homosexuals were faithfully working in the church.

"I'm as much a member of the church as anybody else," said Daley, of St. Francis de Sales Church in Utica, N.Y., who was ordained in 1974 and said he has never considered leaving the priesthood. "I love being a priest."

Researchers have estimated that thousands of homosexual clergy across the United States have dedicated their lives to a church that considers them "intrinsically disordered" and prone to "evil tendencies." Soon, the Vatican will back up that teaching with a document that could set new restrictions on candidates for the priesthood - a pronouncement U.S. bishops may discuss in private during their national meeting starting Monday in Washington.

Yet, through decades of consistent signals from the Vatican that they are unwelcome, homosexuals have continued to join the priesthood, raising questions about how they can devote themselves to an institution that so questions their ability to serve.

"As I have, through the years, become more comfortable with who I am, it seemed the institutional church and its decrees and its pastoral letters from the Vatican seemed more harsh and almost mean-spirited," said Daley, who didn't realize he was Gay until after he was ordained and has remained celibate. "But what I find on the grass-roots level is vibrant, alive communities of faith in my everyday ministry."

Several other Gay clergy, who spoke on condition of anonymity because they feared retribution from their superiors, said in recent interviews that they were only vaguely aware of Vatican pronouncements on homosexual priests when they applied.

"I was pretty naive," said a West Coast priest, who began studying for ordination in the 1980s. "I knew the church had ill feelings about it, but I didn't know a whole lot else."

A key 1961 Vatican document on selecting candidates for the priesthood made clear homosexuals should be barred. But the instruction, and others that followed, have clearly not been enforced in many American seminaries and religious communities. Estimates of the number of Gays in U.S. seminaries and the priesthood range from 25 percent to 50 percent, according to a review of research by the Rev. Donald Cozzens, a former seminary rector and author of "The Changing Face of the Priesthood."

A Gay priest who had been worried that he would be expelled if seminary administrators discovered his sexual orientation said his disclosure was welcomed instead. He said his spiritual director told him, "I'm grateful for your honesty."

Historically, many Gays and Lesbians chose religious life partly because it was a socially acceptable alternative to marriage and protected them from questions about why they were single, Cozzens said. But the Gay priests interviewed for this story insisted they were not hiding out. They said they found religious communities where they could be relatively open with fellow clergy.

"My superiors encouraged me to keep talking about it as a way to help me understand how to better live a celibate life in a real healthy way," said a Gay priest, who attended seminary in the 1980s and refused further identification.

Such support may be harder to find after the new Vatican guidelines are released.

The Italian newspaper Il Giornale reported Friday that the document from the Congregation for Catholic Education will bar from seminary men who "support" Gay culture or have "deeply rooted" Gay tendencies. The newspaper said the instruction will be made public Nov. 29.

The document would not apply to homosexuals who have already been ordained, but Gay priests said it would challenge anew their decision to work within a church whose pronouncements they consider discriminatory.

Anticipating the Vatican pronouncement, some Gay priests are discussing collectively staying away from pulpits on a Sunday to show how much the church relies on them. Other priests said they were considering revealing their sexual orientation to parishioners. Some are contemplating "outing" Gay bishops who would be called upon to enforce the new guidelines.

Any new restrictions would be "discouraging," said the West Coast priest, but "I prefer to work for justice in this area within the church structure."

Another Gay priest said the new restrictions would amount to the church telling him, "to sit on the back of the bus." "But this is my family," he said. "You don't leave your family if there's a problem. I feel God has called me here and that takes precedence over everything else."

Post G/L Films Coming Out

NEW YORK - You better not make any remarks about Gay Perry. He'll kick your butt into next week. He may like your butt. But he'll still kick it, reported the Hackensack [NJ] Express.

"You think that's funny? I'm gonna break your nose now," says Perry (Val Kilmer) to his bumbling straight buddy Harry (Robert Downey Jr.) in "Kiss Kiss Bang Bang," a buddy-buddy detective movie with a double twist: Not only are the buddies Gay and straight, but the Gay guy is a two-fisted macho man, while his straight partner is a comic klutz.

And if you like Gay detectives, how about Gay cowboys ("Brokeback Mountain," opening Dec. 9)? And if you like Gay cowboys, how about Gay soccer players ("Guys and Balls," opening in May)? And if you like Gay soccer players, how about a Gay, deaf, white man and his black partner who are adopting a child ("The Family Stone," opendc Nov. 4)?

Ready or not, here come the post-Gay movies. And audiences do seem to be ready. Ready for movies where the characters are not merely Gay - which used to be as much reality as mainstream viewers could take. These new characters are Gay-hyphen.

Such characters have turned up occasionally in supporting roles in the past (James Gandolfini as a Gay gangster in "The Mexican," The Rock as a Gay bodyguard in "Be Cool"). Now, they're center stage.

" 'Will and Grace' and 'My Best Friend's Wedding' have softened us up with regards to the funny Gay character," says Shane Black, writer and director of "Kiss Kiss Bang Bang."

" 'Well, all right, he's Gay, but they're so funny, those Gays.' And I thought, that doesn't really cut it. We still haven't seen the heroic Gay character that, when the chips are down, kicks down the door, shoots everybody and saves your butt."

Whether these post-Gay characters are also post-stereotype is open to question.

Gay Perry is a tough hombre who can slug his way out of a tight corner, but he's also got a cell phone that plays "I Will Survive."

And the soccer players in "Guys and Balls," a German film, are a collection of Gay "types": a leather guy, a flamboyant guy, a hunky guy, a nerdy guy. But considered strictly as a barometer of audience attitudes, these films may be a kind of advanced. They suggest that mainstream viewers, by and large, no longer find Gayness shocking or exotic enough to be of interest on its own. Like the coffee in your local convenience store, it has become humdrum. Hence the need for add-in flavors.

"People know Gay people now, so it's not so much used for shock value," says Mark Reinhart, spokesman for Regent Releasing, which is distributing "Guys and Balls." "It's more like this makes for interesting textures or layers."

Regent and its sister company Here, a Gay TV network, have been pioneering a new market: Gay genre films. While some of the movies they make or distribute are more traditional pieces like "Summer Storm" (a Gay coming-of-age film) and "April's Shower" (about a Lesbian relationship), they have also released niche films like "Hellbent" (a Gay slasher film) and "Eternal" (a Lesbian vampire flick) and the TV drama "Tides of War," about a Gay submarine captain.

While these films are aimed at Gay audiences, some have had crossover success. "Fangoria did whole pieces on 'Eternal' and 'Hellbent,'" Reinhart says. "It tells you there is a wide variety of interest in the film-going audience."

In "Kiss Kiss Bang Bang," Black exploits this new audience savvy about Gay life to turn the conventions of the detective story upside-down. "So much of this was trying to stand the clichés of the tough-guy movie on their head," he said.

Don't Allow Religious Right To Control Moral High Ground LGBT Activists Told

OAKLAND - More than 2,000 LGBT community leaders from across the country have been told that Gays cannot allow conservative Christians to claim the high ground in the struggle for equal rights, reported 365Gay.com.

Coming on the heels of a vote in Texas where a ban on same-sex marriage was enshrined in the state constitution, a year after 11 other states adopted similar constitutional amendments and in the expectation that at least another ten states will take up the issue over the next year, the Creating Change Conference was an opportunity for grass roots organizations to become mobilized.

The conference in Oakland was organized by the National Gay and Lesbian Task Force. Executive director Matt Foreman told delegates it is time to seize the moral high ground.

"Let's start by claiming our moral values - liberty and personal freedom for all," Foreman said. He implored delegates to concentrate on two key issues this year: reach out to people of faith and demand that Democrats no longer dance around the issue of Gay marriage.

"The Democrats' response to Gay issues over the last few years has been incoherent and spineless, and that has only worked to their disadvantage," Foreman told Reuters. "There is a sense among large Gay donors to the Democratic party that they need to have the party take a stand for us."

In a keynote address to the conference University of Chicago teacher John D'Emilio and author Urvashi Vaid said that while national organizations remain vital to LGBT equality much of the work must be done at the grassroots level.

"A movement does not consist of organizations, it consists of people," said Vaid.

D'Emilio told delegates that in the public eye the most visible LGBT people are white, and that this misrepresents the wide diversity of the community

"Until we shift the colors of our visibility," D'Emilio said, "visibility will remain a double-edged sword."

One of the biggest battles over the next 12 months will be in California where two conservative groups are trying to get separate amendments on the ballot to ban Gay marriage.

High Court Refuses To Hear Appeal Of Pro-Transgender Ruling

WASHINGTON, D.C. - The Supreme Court refused Monday (Nov. 7) to consider shielding employers from discrimination lawsuits by transsexuals, dodging a workplace rights fight, reported the (AP) on Advocate.com.

The court's refusal to intervene leaves in place a victory for Cincinnati officer Philecia Barnes, a Transgender woman who was born Phillip Barnes. A federal appeals court upheld a jury's finding that Barnes had been a victim of discrimination that violated a federal civil rights law. The city was ordered to pay the officer $320,000 plus another $550,000 in attorney's fees.

Barnes, a 24-year veteran of the Cincinnati police force, dressed as a man at work but as a woman during off-hours in 1999, when the officer was demoted. Barnes sometimes wore makeup to work and had manicured nails. Richard Ganulin, one of the city attorneys, told justices that employers should be protected from discrimination lawsuits based on "transsexual and homosexual characteristics." The city maintains the demotion was for professional reasons.

Had the court agreed to hear the case, arguments would have been scheduled in the spring, in time for two justices named by President Bush to weigh in. At issue was the scope of the 1964 Civil Rights Acts, which protects people from sexual or racial discrimination. Sexual orientation is not covered in the law, but justices were asked to deal with a related issue: sex stereotyping of transsexual workers.

The case would have been a follow-up to a 1989 Supreme Court decision that made it more difficult for employers to win lawsuits accusing them of sexual stereotyping and other bias. That case involved a woman who argued she was denied promotion because her supervisors thought she did not act feminine enough.

Justice Sandra Day O'Connor played a key role in that case. She sided with the woman and wrote a separate opinion that gave guidelines for lower courts to follow. Victims, she wrote, must show that "an illegitimate criterion (such as sexual stereotyping) was a substantial factor" in the employer's personnel decision.

Bush has named appeals court judge Samuel Alito to replace the retiring O'Connor, and some civil rights groups oppose the nomination. Another Bush nominee, Chief Justice John Roberts, was confirmed in time for the start of the Supreme Court's term last month. Roberts replaced Rehnquist, who had voted against the female worker in the 1989 case.

There are no good estimates of the number of Transgender workers in the United States because of their fears of going public, said Lambda Legal attorney Cole Thaler. "Trans employees are particularly vulnerable to harassment and discrimination because they deviate from employers' ideas of what men and women are supposed to look and act like," said Thaler.

The sixth U.S. circuit court of appeals in Cincinnati said that Barnes had been subjected to an unusual daily evaluation by other sergeants and required to wear a microphone at all times.

Lambda Disavows Comment By 'Staffer' In New York Times On Alito

NEW YORK - A man identified as an employee of Lambda Legal in a New York Times article on the Supreme Court and who praised high court nominee Samuel Alito does not and has never worked for Lambda the organization said Friday (Nov. 11), reported 365Gay.com.

In an article on concerns conservatives have about the bent of the court the Times quotes David J. Stoll as saying that like Justice O'Connor, Judge Alito would not bring any ideological agenda to cases. "I think he is fantastic," the paper quotes him as saying. The article identifies Stoll as "the former Alito clerk who now works with Lambda Legal," and implies Lambda supports Judge Alito's nomination.

"Mr. Stoll is not a member of our staff or board of directors and his personal or professional opinions are his own and not those of Lambda Legal," said Lambda's Legal Director Jon Davidson. "While we certainly are fortunate to have the support of many talented donors, pro-bono attorneys and cooperating attorneys, none of them speaks to the position of Lambda Legal on this matter."

Attempts to reach Stoll were unsuccessful.

Davidson repeated the organization's position that it has not yet taken a position on Alito's nomination.

"Lambda Legal firmly believes that a strong commitment to equality and fairness for all Americans is a core qualification for a lifetime appointment to the Supreme Court. Legal intellect, experience and independence are necessary, but not sufficient," said Davidson. "Our guiding principle as we examine nominees to the Supreme Court is that parties involved in civil rights claims are entitled to a level playing field when they appear before the Court. The Constitution requires this and it is every justice's responsibility to make this promise a reality."

There are few cases that Alito has heard that give an indication of his position on LGBT issues, and those are mixed.

Alito, 55, has been a strong conservative voice in his 15 years on the Philadelphia-based 3rd U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals. He has been dubbed "Scalito" or "Scalia-lite" by some lawyers because his judicial philosophy invites comparisons to Supreme Court Justice Antonin Scalia. In 2001, Judge Alito authored a decision in Saxe v. State that declared unconstitutional a public school district policy that prohibited harassment against students because of their sexual orientation or other characteristics. But, documents that emerged last week indicate that while a law student Alito advocated the repeal of sodomy laws and called for civil rights legislation for Gays and Lesbians.

Davidson said Lambda will wait until it has completed its own background check on Alito before taking an official position on his nomination. The organization, the only LGBT group likely to argue before the high court, also withheld an opinion of Judge John Roberts until hears on his confirmation were over.

UPDATE

Baylor Gay Purge Extends To Grads

WACO - Baylor University has told a graduate, who served for five years on the advisory board for its business school, that his no longer welcome after learning that he is Gay, reported 365Gay.com.

Tim Smith, a 1983 graduate, was one of 36 members of the Hankamer School of Business advisory panel. In an interview with the Baylor Lariat, Smith says that since graduating from the Baptist school he has personally donated more than $65,000 to Baylor and raised an additional $60,000 to establish an academic scholarship.

Business School Dean Terry Maness asked Smith to step down after he learned of Smith's sexuality. "We must be sensitive to the position of our affiliated denomination, the Baptist General Convention of Texas, which has, on previous occasions, stated that a homosexual lifestyle is incompatible with most Baptist interpretations of scripture," Maness said in a statement.

Smith calls the decision blatant discrimination. "To openly discriminate against individuals on the basis of sexual orientation and to do so in the name of God is simply shameful," he told the Lariat. "The Pharisees would be proud."

Maness did not say if the money Smith had donated to the university would be returned. In September Baylor ordered the campus Starbucks outlet to pull a coffee cup campaign that featured sayings from famous people because one of the quotes was from openly Gay writer Armistead Maupin. Maupin, whose "Tales of the City" chronicled Gay life in San Francisco's homosexual in the 1970s and 1980s, is quoted on the cups as saying "I surrendered my youth to the people I feared when I could have been out there loving someone. Don't make that mistake yourself. Life's too damn short."

Earlier this year Baylor won a lawsuit against a Gay student it had forced to leave the college. James Matthew Bass was accused of sending lewd e-mails to employees and their families after his scholarship was withdrawn and he was not able to pay tuition.

Lawsuit: Colorado Springs Illegally Cancelled G/L Partner Benefits

COLORADO SPRINGS - A Colorado court has been told that the city's cancellation of health benefits to the partners of Gay and Lesbian municipal workers was illegal and that the benefits should be restored.

The argument was made in a brief submitted by the lawyer for two Lesbian couple who say their constitutional rights were violated when Colorado Springs City Council abruptly terminated the benefits in 2003. The city began providing health care benefits to the partners of its Gay and Lesbian workers in 2000. But, in April 2003 a new council ended the plan.

The case was filed in El Paso County District Court by Barb Henson, a 911 dispatcher, and her partner Kaylynn LaGamma, and Connie Trujillo, a unit clerk at the city-owned hospital, and Susan Osorio identified only as a city employee. The City Attorney Stacy Rouse argued that employee benefits are not protected rights and that the city can add or delete such things from its budget from year to year.

Responding to the city, the plaintiffs attorney Trish Bangert, said that the case is not about the city's right to change the budget but the council's attempt to take away rights of privacy, autonomy and association by taking from same-sex couples something it grants to all other workers.

When the suit was filed in February Bangert said the city council was influenced by conservative Christian groups. Colorado Springs is home to the anti-Gay organization Focus on the Family.

Gay Man Who Fought Attack Gets Out Of Jail

PHILADELPHIA - A judge threw out a manslaughter charge against a young man who fatally stabbed a teenager who allegedly attacked him because he is Gay, reported the (AP) on 365Gay.vom.

Municipal Judge Gerard Kosinski also ordered 21-year-old Lucas Dawson, an aspiring singer, released from jail.

Dawson told police that seven people began taunting him, chasing him down and beating him as he walked to catch a bus Oct. 29. He said he pulled out a small knife and waved it, but when Gerald Knight, 17, punched him, he stabbed him in the chest. Knight died within the hour.

"He did the only thing he could do, the only thing in his power to stop the attack," defense attorney Kevin T. Birley said. Dawson called police after the attack and led them to the knife. Assistant District Attorney MK Feeney praised him for turning himself in to police, but said a jury should decide if his actions were self-defense. She had not decided if she would appeal.

The day before the attack, Dawson had performed in front of the "American Idol" judges, his family said. He was eliminated after the third round.

Victims Tell Of Hate Crime Beating

HARTFORD - Hartford detectives are aggressively pursuing leads in a hate crime in the city's south end.

Two Gay women claim they were attacked and beaten. Now, the police department is being criticized for a slow response to the attack. People familiar with the situation say two women left a Gay club and were beaten so badly, they were left with broken bones.

The victims say as they walked to their car just a few blocks away, they were surrounded by a group of young men in white bandanas and puffy jackets. The men knocked the pair to the ground, beat them, yelling names like queer and dyke. Someone called 911.

Sources said the attack victims waited an hour and a half and saw no police, no ambulance. Then some of the young men came back, intimidating the women until they left. The same sources said police did not take a report. A few days later a higher up in the Hartford Police Department learned of the hate crime and got detectives on the case. The department insists though, that a report was taken that day and detectives were assigned to it.

The victims of the attack have been reluctant to talk about what happened. They were so shaken up, they couldn't leave their homes for a week.

'Fraud, Fear, Fowl, Fleeing & A Federal Marriage Amendment'

Dear Gracie:

It's an interesting time in the place that formerly known for democracy and freedom, "the United States of America," especially after recent events and the elections that took place on Tuesday, Nov. 8.

According to Dubya and his crime family, it was the world (France, Britain, Israeli, Russia and the evil United Nations) and their faulty intelligence who got the United States (U.S.) into the war with Iraq. Remember Operation Iraqi Liberation (O.I.L.)? Since this Iraq war that the world got the U.S. involved in isn't going well, with more than 2,000 U.S. soldiers dead and thousands of Iraqis perish costing billions of dollars, so who does Dubya try to blame when the world excuse doesn't work? The Democrats Gracie, despite the fact the Republican Culture of Corruption, who controls the three branches of federal government - executive, legislative and judicial!

This "fraud" doesn't stop just at 1600 Pennsylvania Avenue. On Capitol Hill you have the Republican Culture of Corruption cutting programs and benefits for veterans and for those in need while giving even more tax breaks to the rich, as well as the ongoing Delay-Frist-Blunt-Abramoff scandals and need we even bring up the federal government's lack of response to Hurricane's Katrina, Rita and Wilma. America is finally waking up to their misdeeds Gracie.

Recent polls showing a majority declaring Dubya to be not trustworthy, more than 60 percent disapproving of the Bush Crime Family policies, more than two-thirds stating Iraq was a mistake, 53% of those surveyed would vote for a generic Democratic candidate while 36% would vote Republican, even if the candidate spoke out against the current cabal, and that only one in 10 voters would cast a ballot for a GOP candidate with the same views as George W. Bush and the Republican Culture of Corruption.

Tuesday, Nov. 8, was the first opportunity for America to sound off and they did in the two gubernatorial and legislative elections in New Jersey and Virginia, as well as municipal elections across the county by casting a blue, Democratic ballot.

LGBT citizens scored a victory in Maine by defeating an attempt to scuttle their statewide, anti-discrimination ordinance. Yes Gracie, the wingnuts won in Texas to the surprise of no one, it's Dubya's fraudulent home-turf but in Maine, the radical right had successfully knocked a law such as the current one of the books several times prior and this time they lost soundly!

So what is a politician and party to do when the chips are down and the political numbers look really bad?

First, try fear but since the supposed terror alert level is at orange-plus, find something else to panic the populace. So America endured "news" reports of eco-terrorists destroying computers and burning land which didn't work so onto the second option, a bird flu pandemic! Former President Gerald Ford tried the infamous "Swine Flu" pandemic in the 1970's to no avail so avian and poultry were next!

Dubya cackled about the upcoming flu season and the onslaught of bird flu that would kill so many Americans just like the 1918 influenza epidemic, blathering that he is "concerned" about it but the populace is screwed because the feds haven't produced or purchased enough of the Tami-flu vaccine. Why? Due to the fact that the patent for the vaccine is held by a firm named Gilead. On a side note about Gilead, current Defense Secretary Donald Rumsfeld was the former corporate head, and holds a stake in the company valued between $5- and $25-million dollars.

This didn't "fly" either so onto the third choice, fleeing to Asia, taking California Governor Ahnold with him, who is also licking his electoral wounds, while the Republican troubles continue to mount.

With the "Occupier and Thief" out of the country, Delay and Frist move to their sure-fire answer to motivate the base, a proposed federal marriage amendment for the U.S. Constitution. Yes, smear the queers, just in time for the 2006 elections to try to keep control of Congress and the White House.

This new version is known as the "Marriage Protection Amendment," and is being spearheaded by Kansas Republican Senator, Sam Brownback, who has made his intentions known that he's going to run for the GOP presidential nomination in three years hence. Brownback, who chairs a Senate Judiciary Subcommittee, recently held hearings on the proposal, calling the measure "a key issue in this session of the Senate," and that politics had nothing to do with the proposed and that, get this Gracie, "none of them takes amending the Constitution lightly." Right and Kansas has wonderful mountain ranges too!

By a 5-4 party line vote, the proposed amendment was approved and has been sent to the Senate Judiciary Committee for consideration for which its chair, Arlen Specter of Pennsylvania, who cast the deciding vote said despite the fact he is opposed to the amendment, he voted in favor to allow it a full floor Senate vote. Can we say hypocritical?!

If approved, the "Marriage Protection Act" would rescind the Massachusetts precedent. Brownback's proposed amendment will next be considered Gracie in early 2006. So appropriate, in time for the upcoming Congressional elections and the presidential contest which is just around the corner but of course politics didn't enter into the decision making on this federal legislation.

As ever faithful always!

Out And Influential

NEWYORK - OUT Magazine will release its latest “Out 100” list, which honors annual significant contributions to Gay life. The roster, in the magazine’s December issue, will hit news-stands Tuesday (Nov. 15), reported N.Y. Newsday.

In addition to the 100 Gay men and women “who’ve done something noteworthy this year,” according to Out editor Brendan Lemon, the list also recognizes “straight allies” who had a significant influence on Gay life in 2005.

Sharing the cover of the issue are Chicago decorator Nate Berkus (well-known to fans of “Oprah”), Will Wikle (an openly Gay contestant on “Big Brother 5”) and Sharon Stone. The Gay-friendly but straight Stone is praised for her anti-AIDS work, as well as for the “serious Lesbian lovin’ “ in her upcoming film, “Basic Instinct 2: Risk Addiction.”

More boldfaced names celebrated include WNBA superstar Sheryl Swoopes, who last month revealed she’s in a committed same-sex relationship, now-out singer Lesley Gore (it’s her sexuality and she can exclaim if she wants to) and actresses Portia De Rossi (aka Ellen DeGeneres’ gal pal) and Cynthia Nixon (even though, the magazine fudges, she “has never officially come out”).

Others on the list are Broadway star Nathan Lane, “Desperate Housewives” creator Marc Cherry, writer Bret Easton Ellis, straight Spanish Prime Minister Jose Luis Rodriguez Zapatero (for helping usher in Spain’s same-sex-marriage law) and Bisexual actress Angelina Jolie.

“A talk-show host tried to get [Jolie] to reject her Bisexual past,” says Out executive editor Bruce Shenitz, who has helped assemble the roster for the past five years, “but she wouldn’t go there.” To make the list, Shenitz explains, “there has to be something outstanding and current about what each person is doing in their field, whether it’s entertainment, business, fashion, sports, whatever.”

Which explains how Patty Bouvier,

from “The Simpsons,” made the cut. Marge’s sapphic sis “boldly told the world she liked girls,” notes Out, “and cartoon history was made. Woo-hoo!” Beyond woo-hoos, the magazine issues boos, too. Selected for their noteworthy negative impact on Gay life this year are Jeff Gannon, a homophobic White House reporter later revealed to be a Gay escort, and California Gov. Arnold Schwarzenegger, who vetoed a bill for same-sex marriage. Writer Terry McMillan gets spanked, too, for noting that most Gay men, like the one she married, “are just like dogs.”

Man Convicted In Gay Date-Rape Case

TAMPA - A jury on Nov. 10 convicted Tampa resident Steven Lorenzo on 10 federal counts involving drugging and sexually assaulting Gay men in the Tampa area, the U.S. Attorney’s Office announced, the Tampa Express Gay News reported.

Lorenzo is also suspected of killing two young Gay men, and he and his friend, Scott Schweickert, are expected to face state murder charges.

Lorenzo, 45, a Gay man with a penchant for extreme sadomasochistic sex and bondage scenes, was charged with nine federal counts of using the date-rape drug GHB to subdue unwilling victims whom he then sexually assaulted. He was also charged with one count of conspiracy to possess GHB with intent to distribute. Lorenzo faces a maximum of 20 years in prison on each count. He will be sentenced Jan. 27.

The alleged assaults took place between February 2000 and October 2004, according to the federal indictment. Seven alleged victims testified at the trial in U.S. District Court in Tampa.

Fox’s O’Reilly Supports Al-Qaida Attack On San Francisco For Opposing G/L Ban

BSAN FRANCISCO - Fox News commentator Bill O'Reilly is under fire for suggesting that al-Qaida should “blow up” Coit Tower, one of the San Francisco’s most famous landmarks, because voters backed a resolution discouraging military recruiters on public high school and college campuses, reported 365Gay.com.

The proposition passed by a healthy majority last Tuesday (Nov. 8). It does not ban recruiters, but it does urge schools to reject them. The proposition is not binding but its let the Pentagon know how the city feels about “don’t ask, don’t tell” the military’s ban on Gays and Lesbians serving openly.

On his Fox television show O'Reilly called for President George W. Bush to withdraw any military protection for the city. “...If al-Qaida comes in here and blows you up, we’re not going to do anything about it. We’re going to say, look, every other place in America is off limits to you, except San Francisco. You want to blow up the Coit Tower? Go ahead,” O'Reilly said.

City supervisors reacted angrily to O'Reilly’s comments. “Coit Tower’s a monument to San Francisco’s firefighters,” said Supervisor Chris Daly. “They put out the fires in San Francisco after the great quake. American heroes — they were there on Sept. 11 and now you want al-Qaida to blow up Coit Tower? Give us a break. You are out of line.”

In September, Supervisors voted 8 - 3 to reject a plan to berth the USS Iowa on the city’s historic waterfront and turn it into a museum and tourist attraction. The Supervisors cited the military’s ban on Gays serving in the armed forces for their rejection of the proposal. The same month the California legislature voted to call on Washington to abolish “don’t ask, don’t tell.”

On Veterans Day, LGBT vets held a memorial in Oakland for Gays who gave their lives in the service of their country. A bill was introduced in Congress last March to repeal the ban on Gays and Lesbians in the military. It is sponsored by Representative Marty Meehan (D-MA), is co-sponsored by 100 Republican and Democratic lawmakers, including nine members of the House Armed Services Committee. A recent poll shows that 79% of Americans support allowing gays to serve openly. According to the Pentagon, it has discharged more than 10,000 service members for being gay, including nearly 800 with skills deemed “mission critical” by the Department of Defense.

Kinky Gay Marriage Backer Runs For Texas Governor

FORT WORTH - Author and musician Kinky Friedman has opened a campaign office in his quest to unseat Texas Gov. Rick Perry, 365Gay.com reported.

Friedman is an Independent and considered a longshot - but the pundits dismissed wrestler Jesse Ventura when he ran for governor of Minnesota in 1998. Wearing his trademark black Stetson and smoking an illegal Cuban cigar, Friedman cut the ribbon on the campaign office in Fort Worth.

To be an independent candidate on the ballot, he must get 45,540 signatures between March 8 and May 11 from registered voters who don’t cast a ballot in any party primary or runoff.

“I support Gay marriage,” Friedman says. “I believe they have a right to be as miserable as the rest of us.” He then pointed to a blemish on the end of his nose saying it was probably God’s punishment for his support of Gay marriage.

But, it wasn’t all jokes. Asked about the amendment banning same-sex couples from marrying that was passed on Tuesday (Nov. 8), Friedman said that if elected he’d try to get voters to overturn it. He also says he’s in favor of prayer in schools “I’ll also contend you won’t find any other candidate that supports Gay marriage and prayer in school, for a very good reason, and that is — the party tells these people what to think,” Friedman said.

“So that just shows that I’m honest and that I’m independent-thinking, and if you stop to think about it, that’s not a bad trait for a governor.” Perry campaign director Luis Saenz compared the Friedman effort “no less a joke than what Democrats have put up in recent years.

Perry is being challenged for the GOP nomination by state Comptroller Carole Keeton Strayhorn. Former U.S. Representative Chris Bell of Houston is the best-known Democratic candidate. Meanwhile Friedman has gone some high powered support for his bid for the governor’s mansion in form of Willie Nelson. The country star recently held a fundraiser that netted tens of thousands of dollars for the Kinky campaign.

Country Music Television is working on a reality show on Friedman’s run for the governorship. The network has already committed to airing a preview of the proposed show based. If it’s successful CMT will shoot a whole season, following Friedman and his campaign across Texas. According to a recent Zogby International poll, Friedman would get 21 percent of the vote. Jesse Ventura didn’t reach 21 percent in a similar poll until a week before he was elected Minnesota governor.

Mauresmo Outslugs Pierce

Amelie Mauresmo

LOS ANGELES - Amelie Mauresmo closed out the pro tennis season with her biggest career victory on Sunday at the WTA Championships in Los Angeles. Mauresmo, an openly gay player from France, outlasted fellow Frenchwoman Mary Pierce in the grueling three-set final, 5-7, 7-6(3), 6-4. The match lasted three hours and six minutes, reported the PlanetOut Network,

After the final point Mauresmo sank to her knees and kissed the court floor. She then met Pierce at the net for a hug and a kiss on the cheek. The WTA Championships is the last tournament of the season and is sometimes called “the fifth Grand Slam,” ranking in prestige just below Wimbledon and the Australian, French and U.S. Open tournaments. Mauresmo earned a $1 million cash prize for her victory; Pierce won $500,000.

Mauresmo, 26, has never won a Grand Slam tournament. She came closest in 1999, losing in the final of the Australian Open. A former No. 1-ranked player, Mauresmo ends the year ranked third in the WTA Tour rankings, behind No. 1 Lindsay Davenport and No. 2 Kim Clijsters, the Associated Press reported.

Mercury retrogrades and eventually backs into Scorpio giving us a sense of new oomph with an element of surprise. We find the ability to strategically put out best foot forward but may be unaware of the potholes. Wave the rainbow banner and don't trip on the curb!

ARIES (MAR. 21 - APR. 20)
Travel plans may go awry when retro Mercury loses your luggage. Proud Rams are advised to content themselves with the familiar and routine despite their gnawing desire to spread their wings and soar to new destinations. You find that it is too much trouble to keep all the loose ends tied despite all your best ropes. Leave Paris to the French ... or wherever she wants to go.

TAURUS (APR. 21 - MAY 21)
The temptation will be to speak from your heart this week and let your hands roam into new territories. Check for buried land mines before your paws become ensnared. Lovers send out verbal signals that either seem to miss you entirely or zap you between the eyes. Try not to overreact. Let your passionate embers simmer in preparation for a rousing winter fire.

GEMINI (MAY 22 - JUNE 21)
Expect a few set-twos with partners during retro Mercury. Misunderstandings can abound and suddenly not only are you not in sync but there are distinct fissions. Hold the fort together with patience. Single pink Twins may find that their best moves fail to impress. So why bother right now? Gather a few bosom buddies who know you well and just be yourself. Oh dear....

CANCER (JUNE 22 - JULY 23)
This is a great time to escape and do something fun and different. That's because your day to day work will be even more onerous than usual. No matter how hard you try to accomplish your small tasks, they become entangled in the larger picture with false starts, detours and mishaps. Who needs this aggravation? Not you Gay Crab. Take five. Second thought, take ten.

LEO (JULY 24 - AUG. 23)
This is no time to sit back and let the good times roll. They are apt to roll over you. Proud Lions can't seem to find a way to just relax and have fun while Mercury retrogrades. Expect creative block and scattered priorities. But don't worry cousin. Think of all the momentous work you can accomplish while you wait for a true relaxing moment. How great is that!

VIRGO (AUG. 24 - SEPT. 23)
You mean well around relatives but it seems that no matter what you say or do it is misunderstood. Chalk it up to retro Mercury and practice listening rather than doing. Queer Virgins should probably avoid any home improvements at this time since what you think you want to do will not be the final result. Isn't anyone listening to you? Err yes but you are not making any sense.

LIBRA (SEPT. 24 - OCT. 23)
You are debonair, sultry and sexy and charm just about anyone ... until you open your mouth. Is that spinach in your teeth, queer Libra? Retro Mercury makes even the smoothest talker an insulting bore. So save your best lines for the bank and let your actions speak louder and prouder than your words. That is, if you don't accidentally spill the drinks into your romantic dinner.

SCORPIO (OCT. 24 - NOV. 22)
Whether you are a bull or a bear there should be no buy or sell while Mercury retrogrades. Instead, put your call out for a quiet (read: cheap) evening. Proud Scorps squander on nonsense and can even be cheated because they are not communicating effectively. You may want what you want when you want it but who the heck knows what that is? Certainly not you!

SAGITTARIUS (NOV. 23 - DEC. 22)
Gay Archers are verbally challenged even in the best of times. Now, during retro Mercury, your gaffs take on mammoth proportions. Try to postpone any important meetings or interviews - you will either be late or wish you were. Let's just hope that others will know you well enough to realize that you are now Sadge to the nth degree before they give you the cold shoulder.

CAPRICORN (DEC. 23 - JAN. 20)
Your intuition goes into overdrive and suddenly you are imagining slights, bumps and quarks where there simply aren't any. Things that have come to light over the past few weeks are now fading and are not as frightening as you first thought. So this is not the time to overreact to perceived cosmic rumblings, pink Cap. Perhaps it is just your stomach? Go to lunch. Order wine.

AQUARIUS (JAN. 21 - FEB. 19)
Mercury retrogrades and Aqueerians can begin to feel out of the loop socially. Somehow your great group ideas either fall flat or are ignored. Compadres may disagree with you or there may be several instances of gross miscommunication. Oh so what! You are an independent soul. Go your own way for now and wait for the right time to re-emerge as the belle of the ball. Ring-a-ding!

PISCES (FEB. 20 - MAR. 20)
You have been very crafty in your professional arena recently but expect a span of corporate peril if you do not speak and listen carefully. Guppies grapple with retro Mercury in their career efforts. That means that important instructions, phone calls and emails may go astray and lead you to wasted efforts or incorrect results. It's a great time to vacation.

Noel Coward's Partner, Graham Payn Dies

GENEVA - Graham Payn, an actor and singer who was Noel Coward's longtime companion, died this week in Switzerland at the age of 87, according to news reports.

Born in South Africa in 1918, Payn moved to England in 1929. At the age of 14 he first auditioned for the Noel Coward revue, "Words and Music." In 1945 Coward wrote a leading role for Payn in the show "Sigh No More." The production marked the beginning of their professional and personal relationship, which lasted until the playwright's death in 1973.

After performing in several other stage musicals, Payn turned to television and film, with little lasting success. Perhaps his best-known film was "The Italian Job" (1969), in which he shared comic scenes with Coward. Payn lived with Coward in lavish homes in Switzerland and Jamaica, and he worked less and less during the 1960s — a fact Coward commented on publicly. "He is, I fear, a born drifter," Coward said, according to the Telegraph newspaper. "I know his theatrical career has been a failure but there are other ploys to go after. He sleeps and sleeps and the days go by. I love him dearly forever ... and am happy to look after him for the rest of my life but he must do something."

Payn oversaw Coward's estate after his death and co-edited the playwright's diaries in 1982. In 1994 he wrote his autobiography, "My Life with Noel Coward."

"I loved the man totally," Payn said of Coward. "I realized that I wanted nothing more than to share my life with this remarkable man, to help and protect him as best I could. If I had to write my epitaph it would read 'Friend of Noel Coward.'"

NOTES FROM THE FOR-REAL SIDE

Treason Lite

by Lee Thorn

I can understand why we have to pretend that the president and his vice president weren't involved in blowing the cover of a CIA agent. Their involvement would amount to a kind of cannibalism/infanticide that is just too horrible to contemplate.

I mean the CIA is the president's baby, pure and simple. For the president or vice president to rat out an agent in order to punish her husband would be like a father killing his daughter in order to annoy a particularly unpleasant boyfriend.

But what I don't understand is why the reporter who wrote the column outing the CIA agent has apparently escaped any serious form of public rebuke. He still writes his column. He still has several regular TV gigs. Why isn't this unpatriotic snitch a social pariah?

I'm not saying that he broke any law. I'm not saying that he committed treason. "Treason" as a crime is of course a legal term whose technical ramifications I'm happy to leave to lawyers.

What I am saying is that, under purely colloquial usage, the man is a "traitor." He betrayed his country's secret to the world — friend and foe alike — for the sole purpose of sucking up to the rich and infamous.

And I haven't heard any credible justification offered for his treachery. I haven't heard anyone argue that he couldn't have made whatever point he was trying to make in his column without betraying his country.

I haven't heard anyone argue that he didn't know what he was doing. In fact I saw the snitch himself say that he checked with the CIA about whether they'd mind his proposed revelation and they asked him not to make it.

I haven't hear anyone say that it didn't matter. And here's where it's getting more interesting of late. Some Democratic congressmen are currently trying to find out how much it did matter; they want to see the official CIA damage assessment.

It's a weighty question. When somebody's been a spy for twenty years, she's presumably developed several assets in several countries. When our snitch outed her, all of the intelligence agencies in the countries where she's operated said, "Wow! She was a spy."

Let's take a look at all our nationals who've had contact with her and make sure they weren't her agents."

It's hard to know just how much damage our snitch has caused because we can't know what our spy's agents will be able and willing to reveal when their fingernails are being roughly removed. There's the possibility of a domino effect, not the imaginary kind of Dr. Kissinger, but a real one where a tortured agent of our outed spy identifies agents who the CIA didn't even know about. In other words, the outing of our spy may lead to the unraveling of networks unknown even to us.

So how does our snitch justify his betrayal? How does he keep his jobs and why does everybody treat him like he's done nothing wrong?

There once was a CIA agent who wrote a book called INSIDE THE CIA in which he named active agents. He justified his action as being a patriotic duty by claiming that the CIA was doing harmful things which actually undermined our national interests. He claimed to be helping his country by making it more difficult for the CIA to do things that hurt it.

A lot of people bought that agent's argument. They were people who felt that the CIA had gotten completely out of hand and was engaging in international crimes that were making the U.S. unpopular overseas.

Our current snitch is not making a similar argument. The only credible claim that I've heard made in his defense is that he may not have done anything illegal. So I guess it's okay to betray your country's interests to punish someone who's been critical of your friends just as long as you find a way to do it that's not illegal.

I don't think there's a freedom of the press issue here. I'm not arguing for prior restraint or for subsequent legal sanctions. I don't think we're dealing with a crime in this instance.

I'm just wondering why, when a contemptible snitch damages his country to suck up and doesn't even pretend to have an excuse or a justification, why in that situation said snitch doesn't reap the obloquy he so richly deserves.

Complaint Filed

Over Anti-Military

Campus Protest

RENO - A College Republicans leader at the University of Nevada, Reno, has gone to court over the campus "kiss-in for justice" protest against military recruiters, reported (AP) on Advocate.com.

In a complaint filed in Washoe County district court, group vice chairman Matt Beiser accuses student protesters of intimidating and verbally abusing students trying to talk to recruiters at a UNR career fair. The complaint against the Queer Student Union, Nevada Students for Peace and Solidarity, and Act Now to Stop War & End Racism seeks a temporary restraining order and unspecified legal costs. "The idea behind it was that it's not fair that those groups should be able to dissuade people from finding out about the military recruitment on campus," Beisner told the Reno Gazette-Journal.

Representatives of the three groups denied the charges and decided Friday night to allow the American Civil Liberties Union to file a motion to dismiss the complaint. About two dozen protesters stood with signs around recruiter tables and handed out literature about nonmilitary career options after some protesters kissed each other. They were protesting recruiters' presence on campus as well as the Pentagon's "don't ask, don't tell" policy on gay service members.

"We don't believe kissing and holding hands is a form of harassment and believe that this lawsuit is a homophobic reaction and a blatant attempt at intimidation," the Queer Student Union said in a statement. ACLU officials said the lawsuit was flawed and moot because it merely sought a temporary restraining order.

The complaint was filed the same day the two-day career fair ended. But George Higgins, state chairman of College Republicans, said he's hopeful a permanent restraining order banning similar demonstrations would be issued. Protesters also were accused of blocking access to recruiters' tables. But UNR assistant police chief Todd Renwick said three officers were sent to the career fair and nobody reported any problems. "If they [protesters] were blocking tables, it was never pointed out to us," Renwick said.

Expert: Mayor Downloaded Gay Images

SPOKANE - The embattled mayor of Spokane, Wash., used his City Hall computer to voluntarily download photos and files from a Gay Web site, a computer expert said in an affidavit filed Friday (Nov. 11), reported 365Gay.com.

The statement from Josiah Roloff of Global CompuSearch LLC refutes the contention of Mayor Jim West's lawyers, who say that the files — including over 1,000 photos of young Gay men — were downloaded automatically without his knowledge when he visited sites like Gay.com.

The two sides are waiting to hear whether a Spokane County Superior Court judge will grant a newspaper's request for access to the mayor's computer.

Mayor West, a Republican who has championed anti-Gay causes, is fighting for his political life after the newspaper, the Spokesman-Review, revealed last May that he sought sex with young Gay men in chat rooms and offered city jobs to one or more of them. The scandal resulted in a citizens' initiative to recall the mayor by special election on Dec. 6.

Roloff, working with the Spokesman-Review, said in the affidavit that an index of West's computer files indicated that he had visited Gay.com 56 times, with many of those visits requiring a user name and password. "The Gay.com site will not display personal profiles and the images included on the profiles absent the computer user's affirmative choice to view a certain profile," Roloff said, as reported by the Associated Press (AP).

The Department of Justice is also conducting an investigation of West, but so far no charges have been filed.

In an interview with the AP, West refused to discuss his sexual orientation but expressed remorse for his online activities. "I wish I had never gone online at all. I just wish I hadn't," he said. "I scratch my head today. I can't tell you why."

G/L Bosnians Want Out Of Their Own Country

SARAJEVO - Many Gays and Lesbians in Bosnia are so afraid of discrimination and rejection that they conceal their sexual orientation or make plans to leave the country, a Gay rights group said Monday (Nov. 7), reported the (AP) on Advocate.com.

"When it comes to Gay rights, we are now where the Western world was in the 1950s and 1960s: Most Lesbian, Gay, or Bisexual persons fear if their secret would be made public, they would be rejected by their families, colleagues, and friends," said Svetlana Djurkovic, coordinator of Bosnia's only registered group for Gays, the Q Association.

She said her group interviewed a number of Gays in Bosnia. "Up to 50%...told us they want to leave the country," she said. Among the 214 people interviewed, 90% said they keep their sexual orientation a secret, and 24% said they felt discriminated against either at work or elsewhere. Djurkovic said the study would be expanded.

Open discussion of homosexuality is not yet common in Bosnia. A film depicting Gay love during the 1992-1995 Bosnian war sparked fierce debate in Sarajevo last year even before it was finished. Sarajevo director Ahmed Imamovic's film Go West tells the story of two Gay men—a Serb and a Muslim transvestite—who attempt to flee the besieged Bosnian capital and are captured at a checkpoint by Bosnian Serbs.

Imamovic told reporters in a recent interview that "families easier accept if a member of their family is a war criminal than if he's Gay." More than 75% of Bosnians said in an opinion poll published in May that they would feel "unpleasant" in the company of a Gay person, and 80% had a negative view of homosexuality. The poll of 1,500 Bosnians over age 18 was carried out by the Prism Research agency and was the first survey to question Bosnian attitudes toward homosexuality. Djurkovic said she hopes life for Bosnia's Gays will improve as Bosnia seeks to gain membership in the European Union.
